The Pennine Way is a 410km (257 miles) footpath connecting Edale in Derbyshire with Kirk Yetholm in the Borders. It is waymarked with a National Trail Acorn.

Delightful river side stroll leading to fine views

S From the centre of Middleton-in-Teesdale, head W then N on the B6277 to reach a road junction just before a bridge. Leave the B6277 and go N on a minor road for 300m. Go NW on track which runs parallel to Hudeshope Beck for just over 1km to a bridge. Don't cross the bridge but go N on a footpath through pastures, woodland and by a small gorge to emerge on a tarmac road near Pikestone Brow. (4km)

① Go W on the road and follow it as it bends S and ascends up the hill. Go NW through a gate to follow a track through disused leadmine workings. At the far end of the track a deep gully (Hardberry Gutter) is seen slicing through the hill above. Go W into the depths of the gully (keep to the S edge) before climbing out S at the highest point to visit the summit of Hardberry Hill. (2½ km)

③ Take the second road on the left and go SW to emerge once again on the B6277. Cross and continue SW over a stile opposite that leads to two footbridges - firstly over Flushmere Beck, and then over the River Tees. Immediately on crossing the second bridge, go SE on the Pennine Way. Follow the Pennine Way along the river bank (mainly) to reach the B6276. Go N over the River Tees and return to Middleton-in-Tees and the start. (6½ km)
